Not illustrated. 1886 Excerpt: . . . before abandoning the case as unsuitable for litholapaxy. I cannot too strongly advocate the desirability of removing the whole of the calculus at one sitting. This is the essential principle of the operation. This fact seems to be lost sight of by some surgeons, for I have noticed that in some of their recorded cases a second and even third operation was necessary. An operation prolonged over several sittings in this way involves all the dangers of the old operation of lithotrity, and ceases to be litholapaxy in my acceptation of the term. The following case illustrates a difficulty, though a slight one, which I have, only once met with, but which I consider of sufficient interest for record here: --Case CXXV. --A Brahmin, aged 45, was admitted into the Mussoorie Hospital on the 6th of September 1885, suffering from the usual symptoms of stone, which had lasted 1 years. On passing a sound, two calculi were diagnosed. On the 7th I performed litholapaxy, chloroform being given by Surgeon Tyrrell, and Drs. Whittall, Fiddes, Murphy, and Burlton being also present. After slitting the floor of the meatus, the large lithotrite passed with ease, and the calculi, which were soft, were easily crushed. The No. 18 canula G passed with facility. On applying the aspirator and attempting to inject water, however, the apparatus failed to work. I made several attempts to pump in water, but to no effect. I then withdrew the canula, and found that it...
