But the Thane of Glamis has no such scruples. The only fear he has is that the horrid deed will be blown in every eye, and that Bloody instructions, . being taught, may return To plague the inventor. To further show that No compunctious visitings of nature shook his fell purpose, hear him in Act III., Scene 2, where he complains to his wife that his mind is full of scorpions, and gives as the reason, Thou knowest that Banquo and his Fleance live. Again, in the same Act, Scene 4, when his hired assassins report the death of Banquo and the escape of Fleance, his language shows conclusively that murders, of themselves, however numerous and foul, do not disturb him: Macbeth. There s blood upon thy face. Murderer. Tis Banquo s, then. Macbeth. Tis better thee without, than he...
